

XM provides myself and many subscribers with instant and up to date information that broadcast stations can not provide. It would be a shame to take away such a service, especially a service that is paid for by XM subscribers. The service that XM provides cannot be matched by traditional radio. At best you get snippets of information laced between all the commercials.

This country's economic success is based on free enterprise. If the satellite radio providers have found a better way to broadcast, more power to them.